ECOINT is a research programme at the European University Institute (EUI), funded by the European Research Council (ERC) under the European Union's Horizon 2020 research and innovation programme (grant agreement No 885285).

ABOUT THIS PRIMER

In the 1960s and 1970s, multinational corporations turned into a political issue. The UN was an important site at which this politicisation unfolded. Of particular significance was an initiative of the UN Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC). Grounded in ECOSOC Resolution 1721 (LIII) of 1972, ECOSOC produced a Background Report, appointed a 'group of eminent persons' to study the impact of multinational corporations on development and international relations and asked this group to produce a report with recommendations for international action. The result was the establishment of the UN Commission on Transnational Corporations and the UN Center for Transnational Corporations in 1974.

This ECOINT primer provides information on the ECOSOC initiative. It lists the people who were involved and provides information on the two reports that were produced and have been perceived "groundbreaking and pivotal. They set the pattern and agenda for the UN contribution to the debate on TNCs for many years" (Sagafi-nejad 2008: 87).

This primer is addressed at readers who do not have prior knowledge of the ECOSOC initiative 1972-1974. Its aim is to help gaining a quick overview of some of the initiative's main components.

ECOSOC RESOLUTION 1721 (LIII)

‘THE IMPACT OF MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS ON THE DEVELOPMENT PROCESS AND ON INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS’

Resolutions referenced in ECOSOC Res. 1721 (LIII)

“ Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Governments, to appoint from the public and private sectors and on a broad geographical basis a study group of eminent persons intimately acquainted with international economic, trade and social problems and related international relations, to study the role of multinational corporations and their impact on the process of development, especially that of the developing countries, and also their implications for international relations, to formulate conclusions which may possibly be used by Governments in making their sovereign decisions regarding national policy in this respect, and to submit recommendations for appropriate international action, the study group to consist of not less than 14 nor more than 20 persons”

Sagafi-nejad (2008: 55) calls Philippe de Seines the “prime architect” of resolution 1721 (LIII).

“It was, perhaps, the most comprehensive review of the state of knowledge on TNCs at that time and was groundbreaking in its scope, content, and format. Its layout became a prototype for the World Investment Report and other publications. The range of policy issues it covered set the agenda for subsequent years, and the concepts it considered became springboards for later UN work.” (Sagafi-nejad 2008: 60)

“ Since the tensions and conflicts that arise from the operations of multinational corporations are international in character, programmes which are limited to one side or to only some of the parties concerned are unlikely to be adequate. [...] International measures are clearly necessary to achieve a balanced and more equitable solution.” (p. 86)

“ [The group of eminent persons] heard testimony from some 50 leading personalities from government, business, trade unions, special and public interest groups and universities. This novel approach for the United Nations proved to be a most useful source of information and a valuable medium in which to test ideas. It succeeded in bringing about a high degree of public involvement in a subject which is both complex and of direct concern to many individuals and interest groups.” (Report of GEP, p. 4)

REPORT OF THE GROUP OF EMINENT PERSONS

'THE IMPACT OF MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS ON DEVELOPMENT AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS'

ST/ESA/6

“ a drafting committee composed of about half the members of the Group met in Rome [...] to prepare the elements of a draft report [...]. This was followed by a meeting in New Delhi [...] of the Chairman [Jha] and another member of the Group [Dunning] to prepare the draft on the basis of the Rome meeting. The Rapporteur [Somavia] completed the draft in Geneva from 1 to 4 March 1974. (GEP Report 1974: 19)

“ The report of the Group is composed of three parts. Part one contains a general analysis of the role and impact of multinational corporations on development and on international relations, followed by the Group’s recommendations for international machinery and action. Part two analyses in greater detail some of the specific issues involved and contains recommendations which Governments may wish to consider when formulating their policies on the subject. Part three contains comments by some members of the Group. Most of the nine members who availed themselves of the opportunity to include individual comments did so in order to add to, expand, interpret or qualify various passages of the report. A few of them did so to criticize some of its content. (GEP Report 1974: p. 4)

REPORT OF THE GROUP OF EMINENT PERSONS

The report provided a number of recommendations. Like the Background Report it suggested the establishment of:

Commission on multinational corporations

Information and research centre on multinational corporations

Furthermore

“ The Group recommends that host countries should specify as precisely as possible the conditions under which multinational corporations should operate and what they should achieve. They should also indicate the ways in which the activities of multinational corporations should be integrated into the local economy and fit into the over-all priorities of the country.

The Group recommends that host countries should consider setting up centralized negotiating services or co-ordinating groups to deal with all proposals for foreign investment, especially from multinational corporations.

The Group recommends that the United Nations should strengthen its capacity to assist host countries, at their request, in such negotiations with multinational corporations, as well as to train their personnel in the conduct of such negotiations.

The Group recommends that in the initial agreement with multinational corporations, host countries should consider making provision for the review, at the request of either side, after suitable intervals, of various clauses of the agreement. The review by the host country should be carried out by the negotiating services or co-ordinating groups recommended above.

The Group recommends that developing countries should consider including provisions in their initial agreements with multinational corporations which permit the possibility of a reduction over time of the percentage of foreign ownership; the terms, as far as possible, should also be agreed upon at the very beginning, in order to minimize the possibilities of future conflict and controversy

REPORT OF THE GROUP OF EMINENT PERSONS

“ The Group [...] recommends that international public aid should be increased, as recommended by the International Development Strategy, and directed to the basic needs of the poorest part of the population in developing countries, especially with regard to food, health, education, housing, and social services, as well as the development of indigenous industries.

The Group recommends that host countries should adopt policies towards affiliates of multinational corporations similar to those applied to indigenous companies, unless specific exceptions are made in the national interest.

The Group recommends that host countries should clearly define the permissible public activities of the affiliates of multinational corporations and also prescribe sanctions against infringements. The financial contributions of multinational corporations as well as of others to interest groups, should be regulated and disclosed.

The Group unequivocally condemns subversive political intervention on the part of multinational corporations directed towards the overthrow or substitution of a host country's Government or the fostering of internal or international situations that stimulate conditions for such actions, and recommends that, in such an eventuality, host countries should impose strict sanctions in accordance with due process of law of the host country concerned. Home countries are encouraged to consider ways of ensuring that their investment guarantee schemes do not make these sanctions ineffective.

The Group recommends that whenever there is occasion to nationalize the assets of a multinational corporation, host countries should ensure that the compensation is fair and adequate and determined according to due process of law of the country concerned, or in accordance with any arbitration arrangements existing between the parties.

The Group recommends that, in such contexts, home countries should refrain from involving themselves in differences and disputes between multinational corporations and host countries. If serious damage to their nationals is likely to arise, they should confine themselves to normal diplomatic representations. No attempt should be made to use international agencies as means of exerting pressure.

The Group recommends that home and host countries should ensure, through appropriate actions, that multinational corporations do not violate sanctions imposed by the United Nations Security Council, for example, on countries suppressing human rights and following racist policies.

The Group recommends that home and host countries should explore, with the help of the appropriate United Nations body, the possibility of concluding an international agreement regulating the issue of extraterritoriality of jurisdiction. As an interim measure, formal consultative machinery should be established in cases of conflicts of jurisdiction.

6

REPORT OF THE GROUP OF EMINENT PERSONS

“ The Group recommends that the Economic and Social Council should give consideration to the adoption of a resolution embodying the recommendations in this chapter.

The Group recommends that a commission on multinational corporations should be established under the Economic and Social Council, composed of individuals with a profound understanding of the issues and problems involved.

The Group recommends that an information and research centre on multinational corporations should be established in the United Nations Secretariat or closely linked with it, which, under the general guidance of the commission on multinational corporations, would perform the following functions:

- (a) Provide substantive and administrative services for the commission on multinational corporations;
- (b) Collect, analyse and disseminate information, and undertake research along the lines recommended above.

The Group recommends that the technical co-operation capacity of the United Nations in matters related to multinational corporations should be significantly strengthened and expanded in the areas of training and advisory services.

The Group recommends that host countries should clearly define and announce the areas in which they are ready to accept foreign investment and also the conditions upon which such investment will be allowed in those sectors. In particular, developing countries should be encouraged to retain ownership of their natural resources or control the use of them.

The Group recommends that where ownership is an important objective for host countries, consideration should be given to the establishment of joint ventures as well as to the reduction over time of the share of foreign equity interests.

The Group recommends that before a multinational corporation is permitted to introduce a particular product into the domestic market, the host Government should carefully evaluate its suitability for meeting local needs.

The Group [...] recommends that the machinery for screening and handling investment proposals by multinational corporations, recommended earlier, should also be responsible for evaluating the appropriateness of the technology, and that its capacity to do so should, where advisable, be strengthened by the provision of information and advisory services by international institutions.

The Group recommends that host countries should require multinational corporations to make a reasonable contribution towards product and process innovation, of the kind most suited to national or regional needs, and should further encourage them to undertake such research through their affiliates. These affiliates should also be permitted to export their technology to other parts of the organization at appropriate prices.

REPORT OF THE GROUP OF EMINENT PERSONS

“ The Group draws attention to the work of the Economic and Social Council and UNCTAD on technology (including decision 104 (XIII) of the Trade and Development Board on exploring the possibility of establishing a code of conduct for the transfer of technology) and recommends that international organizations should engage in an effort to revise the patent system and to evolve an over-all regime under which the cost of technology provided by multinational corporations to developing countries could be reduced.

The Group recommends that host countries should explore alternative ways of importing technology other than by foreign direct investment, and should acquire the capacity to determine which technology would best suit their needs. It also recommends that international agencies should help them in this task.

The Group recommends that home and host countries develop plans concerning employment, and clearly inform the multinational corporations of their employment objectives.

The Group recommends that home and host countries, through general budgetary support, the normal working of the social security system or the establishment of social funds, provide for full compensation to the workers displaced by production decisions of multinational corporations. Recognizing that some developing countries do not possess adequate means for that purpose, the Group recommends that consideration should be given to the creation of an international social fund, including contributions by multinational corporations, which would supplement the resources available to such countries.

The Group recommends that host countries take appropriate measures to obtain the maximum benefit from the entry of multinational corporations into their countries for as large a section of the lower income groups as possible.

The Group recommends that the proposed commission on multinational corporations study the various forms and procedures that could be evolved to ensure the participation of workers and their unions in the decision-making process of multinational corporations at the local and international level.

The Group recommends that home and host countries permit free entry to unionists from other countries representing international or national organizations, engaged in legitimate investigations or other union missions, including entry at the invitation of the workers concerned or of their unions to assist them in their negotiations with multinational corporations.

The Group recommends that in the matter of sympathy strikes or other peaceful forms of concerted action, Governments should follow liberal rather than restrictive policies.

The Group recommends that home countries should require multinational corporations to declare in all countries in which they operate, all measures of safeguards and special working conditions which they observe in their home countries to protect the health and safety of workers and to observe those measures in similar production processes in host countries with such changes and adaptations as the host Government may specify.

6

REPORT OF THE GROUP OF EMINENT PERSONS

“ The Group recommends that, through appropriate means, home countries prevent multinational corporations from going into countries where workers’ rights are not respected, unless the affiliate obtains permission to apply internationally agreed labour standards,, such as free collective bargaining, equal treatment of workers and humane labour relations.

The Group recommends that host countries should require multinational corporations to declare, upon their entry, their intentions concerning purchasing and export policies and to make clear the extent, duration and justification of any possible restrictions.

The Group recommends that host and home Governments, preferably through an international agreement, should prohibit the market allocation of exports by multinational corporations, unless it can be shown that such allocations are necessary to secure other benefits to the countries concerned.

The Group recommends international recognition of the principle that restrictive clauses and market allocation by multinational corporations should be eliminated within regional groups of countries.

The Group recommends that the work of the Group of Experts on Tax Treaties should be speeded up, and that the bilateral treaties should be as uniform as possible so as to prepare the way for an international tax agreement.

The Group further recommends that developed countries should, without delay, embark on a policy of entering into such treaties with developing countries, bearing in mind the importance of increasing the flow of capital to and strengthening the revenues of the latter.

The Group recommends that the various schemes which are or may be applied for taxation of multinational corporations should be supplemented by the provisions which it has suggested in each case to meet the various objectives which it has analysed.

The Group recommends that an expert group on international accounting standards should be convened, under the auspices of the commission on multinational corporations.

The Group recommends that Governments should, as a rule, disclose the principal terms of agreements between them and multinational corporations; the information and research centre on multinational corporations should serve as the depository for information on such agreements. The centre should also prepare digests and summaries of such information.

The Group recommends that the machinery for formulating and implementing government policies towards multinational corporations, recommended earlier, should devise procedures for the collection of information about the performance of multinational corporations in specific areas.
